The cultivation of the earth in the East is being abandoned. Commerce and manufacturers offer great inducements. The young man and the young woman rush to the cities of the sea-board and the towns along our railways, and all the increase of population is there, and not in the rural districts. The census shows such to be the case in the New England States, and the governor of New York calls atttention to the same fact in that Sate. The value of lands, too, shows this. Here in Essex county, with the great population we have, and a market at every door and by every barn yard, land sales give little or no advance.
